

The FCC should not overturn or otherwise modify the NJ "Do Not Call" legislation. As a member of the legal profession and a common citizen, the NJ law has provided me with the freedom of not receiving phone calls, both at work and at home, from unsolicited telemarketers. The word unsolicited should not be taken lightly! If a consumer or advocate requires a good or a service, the consumer is smart enough to solicit same. There are plenty of avenues for businesses to generate their clientele. Placing unwanted and inconvenient calls to people is simply not the way business should be carried out in America. The NJ law properly balances the needs for the public and should remain as is.
